The City Club's history of Eugene is an anthology of essays about the people and decisions that made Eugene the community it is today. The book covers spans the time of the community's most rapid growth and transformation, from the end of World War II to the present. Each of the twenty-two essays is written by a different author who was asked to not only recount historical fact, but also to provide his or her assessment as to whether we are better off today as a result of those decisions.

The City Club of Eugene is the publisher of this book. To contain costs, City Club is using a "print on demand" method of publication. As the term implies, the books are printed as the orders are placed for them.
